

What a great day it is to use the languages to communicate with each other. Words that have so much power that we can share with you and others that might read them. Words are akin to the proof of memories, when you think about it, except that you visually see them with your eyes rather than your mind.

Your memories, however, remain in your mind, due to the limitation of your measure and use of time. In our world, your memories are real. We can revisit them whenever we choose and be within them to experience everything as it unfolded.

This is something you'll be able to do when you come here. Can you imagine being able to jump back into a memory and relive it in person? Of course, we cannot change the events of it, merely observe everything as it unfolded on your linear timeline.

Think of a memory from your past. I see it now. I am in that room with you, your mother, and your father. Your sister was due to come to that house but she didn't make it on the day. I can see the date on the newspaper your dad is reading. Can you see it? No, because it is not part of your memory. Let me tell you, it's Friday 14th October 1982.

You see, I am part of that memory. I am there and you will be able to be there when you arrive here. You can revisit whatever memories you choose.

Often, your tutors talk of something they call 'The Akashic Records'. Though many of your tutor's interpretations are incorrect, such re-experiencing incidents from your linear timeline is completely doable from here.

As you can imagine, there are millions of memories happening all the time across the planet by billions of people. so revisiting particular memories is really only acceptable by the person that created them. But the point is that although you have lived the moments that are now spent with you, they are still available for us here to visit, as you will also be able to.

I started this session by stating how there is a similarity between the words you write and the memories you make. The difference being that written words are physically visible and can be re-read at any time.

I hope you've enjoyed this principle I've shared with you today. The energy you have created in your cabinet has allowed for this increased detail. Well done. Can we do more of this with you again soon?

When you return to your home in a few moments, Pamela wants you to select a tarot card blindly. It'll have a bird in the scene. This is your New Year message from her.

We'll speak again soon. Goodbye.
