Well well, who's a jolly sailor. You wanted a noticeable introduction. Was that good enough?

There are countless times in your life when you'll waste a lot of time with someone in, what we know as, small talk. Even the humble hello and goodbye are really just words we tag onto sentences to conclusion or commence a conversation with someone.

But there are endless times where the art of small talking is stretch beyond necessity. One of the worst occasions is when we communicate with the Divine. God doesn't need to hear the small talk. He needs to hear what it is you really want to say.

I'm not proposing rudeness when you talk, merely to get to the point and omit some of the nonsense. Some people seem to waffle in something off big words pleasing the Divine. He doesn't need to hear it. If he were to talk to you, he would not want you addressing him as the almighty, the saviour, the presence ruling all life. It means nothing to hear those words. Let's be honest, some people just say it with the hope of impressing him. It does no such thing.

In the same light, some people like to suggest that God is here to serve us, or that God will punish, banish and cast karma on us. Really? Those are the words from someone that does not understand God or the part he plays in our life.

Even as you write my words for me, I feel your hangups about me referring to God as him. Does it matter? He is neither, truth be known, Nor is he a person in the image of mankind.

God is God. The Divine if you must. But God is not responsive to titles or descriptions.

Sometimes, I view your world with fright and anger with the way everyone has gone mad about political correctness. I say again, God is God and defies titles and and descriptions.

This is why so many people fail to embrace the essence of God.

They are seeking some wonderment that does not exist.

Yes God can use your language, and yes God will speak. But not as that thing, that mock, that being so many people believe he is

Do you want to bring God into your life? Then do as he does and accept him without preconditions or notions as to what you expect from him.

Do you expect a dog to have manners at a meat table? Of course not. A dog is a dog, and the same is so about God. God is God and all you have to do is recognize him and know that he is already part of your life. He always was, and he always will be. No titles, no fancy names, no highlighting description of what he is or isn't, because you'd be wrong on all counts.

That is my message to you today.
When you embrace the message
from my words, then you will grow stronger and become more aligned with the word of God.

I hope I've made some sense today. It has been a wonderful experience for me today and you have done a good job writing my words as you have.

I sent you love and peace, always.
Now go and embrace God with the nakedness he expects.

Goodbye for now.
