

Good day. The biggest mystery to mankind on earth should not be whether there is a life after earthly death occurs, but how best to utilise the life that is the here and now - on the planet as a physical form.

Its as if some people rest on the false belief that there is no afterlife and therefore why not just enjoy the life we have. Then there are others that think they know of an afterlife and spent too much time - wasting trying to find out more about it, instead of focusing on improvements to the life they have at that time.

Even you, dear sir, often expect those that communicate with you to reveal more about this life you call the afterlife, instead of asking what you could be doing to make your current life of greater value.

Whenever any of us speakers reveal something more about this life to you, you go away and debate whether it can be so. These foibles show weaknesses in your structure and form. Yes I perfect my words carefully there. Let me explain.

On your side of life, you see everything with structure and form as objects. Your body is an object. You just don't think of it that way. But that structure and form is not just physical. Your spirit and soul have structure and form too.

The structure comes from the ingredients it is made up of. For example, your collective emotional states and how you have used them all create the structure and therefore the form of your spirit and soul. Your actions in the physical form effect your structure and form. In the etheric world you will one day arrive.

A word my colleagues and friends here have used on more than one occasion with you is 'Betterment'. Think how you perceive that word for one moment.

Betterment is a wide meaning word that refers to your collective structure and form in whatever life form you exist. This, and this alone should be your only concern, your only focus. Every moment and Every breath you take should be in pursuit of that betterment - that forms your structure - who you really are and where you are going.

The human belief that life is eternal is held by a few. Sadly, most of those few believe that an eternal life means nothing more than continuing the life they led on earth over here too:

What purpose would that have? Yes life as the meaning of the word suggests is indeed eternal. But progression is the force that it requires.

Nobody lives here in one state of being forever. In terms of time compared with your time structure, it may appear like forever. It is not.

What is ahead for you, and me for that matter, is greater, richer and more meaningful than bare living, a bare life.

Each of us will progress through our betterment and acceptance of the reality that we are individuals forever. We will become the collective and become part of that eternal force called life.

Betterment brings with it an understanding of our meaning and our part in the infinite and eternal presence.

Waste no time using your current form life in seeking answers you could never understand anyway.
Instead, use every moment for your betterment, your future as part of that infinite consciousness.

I don't know what lies ahead for me,
I just know it is important I do what I can to prepare through betterment to become part of the greatest force of all - the Divine force, you might say.

I've said my piece for you and those that read these words.
Perhaps it was time you had a reality check, because your life
at present is not living in reality.
Think on dear friend.

Goodbye.
