Let us commence this evening. Every child, born of the Divine is equal. There are no favourites, no blessed, no gifted any more than the others. God made all man equal. Any differences that occur in later life are cast upon that person from those they associated with along the way. Man has a saying that goes,

A leopard cannot change its spot!

It is true that the features a person possesses are never going to change. Blue eyes are blue eyes, all the way through life. But that is the only truth in that saying. Yet it is common for man to use that phrase when referring to a man's personality, his characteristics, his outlook on life and his morals. Yet in all of these aspects of a person, none are fixed. They evolve with the person. Their life path, their day to day living style, their prospects, their standing around others, all blend and change who that person was, is and will become. Who you are today and what you stand for, what your beliefs are, and who you have become, can and often will change in the future.

Think back to your own personality from, say, ten years ago. Now consider how you have changed since then. Many subtle changes have occurred already and over the coming ten years many more changes will reshape you. So you see, the person that misquotes the leopard spots saying 'really' is talking from a point of ignorance and a lack of true understanding.

Not all changes that we make are for the greater good of us. Some are though. Either way, we have evolved at the same time as we have aged. This evolution doesn't end when we leave our body behind. We continue to evolve, as individual souls and as free spirits free to take whatever path we choose to in life.

When this group here for this session sit together on other occasions, we like to communicate with evolved spirits in higher realms than the one we're in at the time.

The messages we receive from these higher planes are often mind-blowing.

These evolved life forms are ordinary spirits that were once embodied on earth, way before we were born.

Their evolution has happened because of their desires to learn even more.

My friend, fear not who you are today, for that appearance is only temporary. Fear not where you have come from either and worry not about tomorrow. Your actions today will shape your tomorrow. This is why you'd do well to maintain a clear vision moving forward. In fact, the future you lies within your mind right now. God be with you. Sleep well.
