

Good day to you chap. Nice to have you connected to talk to. You're on the island of Lanzarote once more. We've been informed how much you love it there.

When I was on earth, I didn't travel outside of my country. Life was very much more simple back then. We used to think a trip to the nearest big city was exciting.

We talked of the foreign places but we knew we were never going to see them. Apart from anything else, travel was difficult. I was around when the first charabang came to our town. That was such an exciting adventure. I once got to ride on the top deck.

My memory tells me that that was the day it broke down, just outside our village. I only got to ride for a few hundred yards.

But just because our life was much simpler back then, doesn't mean it wasn't worthy. It was richer in so many more ways than your world is today. We experienced true family time. Mom and Dad always sat with us and we were always chatting, laughing

and telling stories.

Comparing my earth life to your replay in your world is not really a sensible notion.

Humans have always adapted to their circumstances and made the best of it.

what they've got. Am I envious of your lifestyle now?
No not in the least. I don't understand it enough to be able to make an educated answer.

Life is evolving and with it, the way humans interact with their planet. Your modern technology is all part of the evolution.

Never confuse evolution with revolution, the latter being something that repeats.

Evolution on earth for

Choose living there is exciting I'm sure. But I don't miss my old world. Where I am now is far greater than anything that will ever exist on earth.

The day will come when your technology will unite the two worlds, but it will be many more of your years before everyone accepts it.

We're often asked by earth people if we experience aging at all.
The answer is quite

the opposite to what you might think. We evolve, we don't age. I've come to understand that eventually each of our souls will merge with another soul and again another soul and so on. This is our evolution. It's a progression that is unidirectional to us as individual souls.
I've heard that our memories of earth life fade as it becomes less important to us.
As we individually grow in understanding, meaning and love, this becomes our domination. We blend with other souls with a purpose to continue the journey towards the ultimate love.

In terms of comparing my time here with your timeframe, I'm a man youngster and I don't believe I'm ready to move on yet, but of course I don't know.
I'm just happy with who I am in this here and now space of infinity.

So although you believe you're in your paradise space now, the future offers so much more for you. And please don't forget, when I say future, that spans your life on earth and the transition into the
one of mine.

Thank you for allowing my words to achieve
life through your pen.
Perhaps I will be given the opportunity to speak to you again soon.

For the meantime my friend, please keep learning more about the contradiction of life. You've not scratched the surface of the endless possibilities.
Goodbye to you dear friend. I must part company,
