

Good evening Trevor. Have you ever wondered how different life on earth would be if there was no life after the one you know on earth? There's something for you to ponder over some time.

Life as you know it would be somewhat different. There would most likely be no religions because there would be no belief in a god. All religions believe in an afterlife in some form or other. So they would not exist if there were no life after the physical one.

Yes of course you would still have those that might want to believe in something else, but without evidence or proof, they would serve no purpose and their beliefs would not be heard or contemplated by the majority. But deeper than that, evolution would not have brought life to where it is now. Why do I say that? Because evolution is about a claphan and improvement for the betterment of the life.

That only happens because there was a past to compare it with and a future for it to aim at. Those two reasons alone are credent of a god or an intelligence at work. So without another life beyond your physical one, there would be no ad rem cements necessary.

Mankind would be lost in such an environment, that's if one existed at all. Life itself is evidence of a greater force at work.

In your own understanding of your solar system, you believe you have many other planets and as you understand it, none other than earth, sustain life. Do you think that is because of biological and scientific reasons? That's a narrow-minded way of thinking. What if those planets simply don't have a god existence? What if life can't exist on them because there is no God, no force of life, no reasons?

Indeed life is precious, as you well know. But life is God, and God is eternal. Not just in itself, but in everything it creates. You have the scientific proof to support that.

You have come to understand that the God gene is in all life. It has to be for it to exist.

God is eternal, as is life itself.
The truth of all truths is that God does exist, as does life and eternal life. A place without such life force would be barren, where nothing exists. There is no such creation, even on those planets you believe are lifeless.
Life exists everywhere and where there is life, there is therefore eternal life. Life that grows, that feeds, that evolves, that prospers. Life is beyond your imagination of countless possibilities. Life is everything and anything. And therefore life is unquenchably eternal.

It is a small mind that suggests this can only be proven through communications such as these we are having. People seeking evidence from a tiny portion of the mass of everything.

I am aware that to feel the love of a soul from your planet, through God's power of love and a medium is valuable. But that source alone is a mere particle in the essence of life.

I have lived for many of your years and beyond. I have experienced God's essence in its purest form.

Perhaps you might think of me as God itself. I hope you do.

Because I am God, as are you and as is all life. Remember, God is life and God is eternal.
You are created in the same form; the same essence, the same life.

Mankind has so much to learn.
There is no such thing as infinite wisdom because life, God, is evolving, ever evolving, ever living. You could say the future doesn't exist, because the future is happening now.
But that debate is for another day.

Perhaps I've shared some thoughts to allow you to expand your beliefs. I hope so very much. But you'd all do well to see life beyond the shackles of your mind, if that is at all possible.

I started my conversation with you this time asking you to consider life on earth as all there is. Now I hope you understand why that is simply not possible.

I'll leave my thoughts with you.
