

Good afternoon sir. I have been invited to share some words of wisdom with you this session. I've been told also to keep you on track! You must only write what I say, or very close, or I must tell you to change it.

Apparently you are okay with this tool and don't need correcting very often. We'll see!

Do you think the word 'wisdom' when used for a collective phrase should be considered as fancy words. Or should the words of wisdom be taken as advise to use in your own journey of life?

We have noticed that when people from our world share our words of wisdom ~~also~~ with people like you that can relay them, generally people dismiss them, treating them somewhat as 'not for them'.

When I was living your side, like you, I was a medium and always willing to learn.

Yes sorry; I missed a line out there, thank you for erasing it. I was meaning to say, I was so keen, I had a notebook that was given me one Christmas. I wrote on the cover, "my learned words of wisdom rules book".

I made it my purpose every day to write at least one sentence of wisdom I had learned that day. I acted upon those entries as often as I could. Over my time, I collected many hundreds of pearls I'd learnt from others.

I have the book here with me now. No don't waste mind energy thinking about how it came to be here, that is for another day.

May I show a few of my wisdom entries?

This first one, I wrote in 1963 after watching a medium at a local church. I wrote:

"Always appear smart and presentable to be taken serious"

The medium that night was in a suit and everyone had huge respect for him. I liked that dress code and adopted into my work.

Here's another random wisdom entry from my collection.

This one I wrote in May 1969

"Do as you say to others do".
I know it's short, but I copied it from a book. Perhaps with your modern technology you might find out what book it was from.

I wrote it because I had become annoyed at other people telling me what I should do to live a spiritual life, but knew they weren't acting on their own words.

Here's another one from a few pages before that one.

I wrote this in February 1969.
"Let not thy tongue be your downfall".

Again, I learned that some people I'd thought as wise, weren't acting that way, away

from their public persona.

My friend, I loved this book.
It was my most prized possession.
I would only request to share one piece of wisdom
with you today:-

"Learning is acting upon,
doing, and living by."

Does that make sense?

Consider what I have taught you this day and consider how you could bring this wisdom into your learning path.

My name was and still is George. I've enjoyed sharing my words with you today.
Go forward with your work and make a difference.

I send you healing for your temporary infection.

Goodbye.
