

The world that mediums live in is extraordinary, don't you think?

The vast majority of people know little or nothing of their world, or at least, the way it is viewed by the medium.

The headline statement that life continues after that short one in the physical state is so emotive to others. Yet this world where we in this life phase have communicated with earth dwellers has existed for as long as the world has existed.

There have always been so many challenges associated with it though. Let me explain.

On your planet, you have the horrid disease you call cancer. Yet cancer is not a single ailment. It is the collective term you use for diseases you term as cancer.

The same is so with mediums and connecting our two worlds.

Every medium, whether on your earth, or here in this world, is different to the next. No two mediums are the same.

Each individual medium has to learn what works for them to get the best results. There are no carbon copies. Even though we are more aligned this side to getting better results, we too are unique. Did you notice how quickly I was able to connect with you and capture your attention? Others in this group might have taken longer

Then the next issue to overcome would be finding what state of emotions and conditions you were in at that moment of your time.

Sometimes the connection is quick, like this one was. Other times it appears to you that it takes longer.

You often refer to mediumship as not being an exact science. That is not strictly true. It takes a few ducks in a line for it to work, for both sides.

The Divine made every life unique in many ways. Yes we all might start with the same shaped body, but the real workings are in the mind and the personality. A unique mixture of compounds, emotional states and balances.

Your teachers do their very best, as you do, to share what it is they have learned and what works for them. But the crux is on the individual to constantly be fine-tuning and seeking better or alternative methods.

Your physical mediums are rare on earth because of the finely tuned set of conditions required for their work to be successful. Mediums, such as yourself, have explored other ways, such as you are using now. Even with your mind mediums, no two are alike. By the way, I prefer to call them mind-mediums. A much kinder term than mental mediums, which sounds like an inflection!

Sometimes we are aware that a medium on your side is struggling because he or she is trying far too hard to copy someone teaching them. The principles are more broader than you realise and what works for one, may not work for another. Every medium would be wise to consider themselves like a transistor radio with its own unique tuning needed.

Please pass my words on to any students you cross paths with. These truths alone may help them to explore their own unique potential and explore alternative methods, even if its only to do a little fine-tuning.

I am sitting in an advanced group of mediums this side and believe me, we are all unique.

Always remember, you have your own unique instructions. Take time to find them, and then fine-tune them. And never rule out exploring new methods.

Our two worlds are very close. It is up to you, and the next medium to find what writes us.

Thank you for your diligence this time. My words have been written well.

Peace be with you.
