

Good evening my friend. You join again for some more learning. I wonder if I may be so bold as to ask you what it is you wish to learn.

I know that sit with an open mind and a willingness to discover and explore what you can, about me and my world. But consider this for a moment.

If you were an alien of your planet and you were beamed down to the surface for the first time ever, what would you see when you open your eyes to this new world?

Would what you see give you the whole picture of the planet? Would that scenery, that weather, that temperature you experience on that new planet reveal enough to leave you with an understanding of what that world is like?

Surely not. Your impression would be limited only to that one small view in that one location. Therefore you could not conclude that your understanding the planet earth, could you?

This is also true of my world I live in now. I have not seen everything there is to see. I have not smelt all the flowers and fauna there are to smell. I have not felt all sensations and variations within my world. I have not viewed all the palaces, the mansions and the great homes. Nor will I ever, in this life or any that follow it.

My knowledge, like yours, is limited by my present situation, as is yours.

You may know that island of Lanzarote well enough to talk freely for a long time about it. But does that describe the world to others? No it does not.

I might spend many of your hours, days, weeks and months talking to you about my world where I am now. But all that will serve to do is give you a narrow viewpoint about my world.

Surely you must therefore conclude with me that you will never, ever fully be able to appreciate the vastness of my world or the world you will one day inherit as yours.

Many questions that you ask about the world after yours cannot be answered with a satisfactory fullness that it deserves.

This world contains many visions, great kingdoms, societies, ways of living on, ways of growing and ways of learning. This world is richer than the finest writer could ever describe with any elegance of language.

The most fundamental of all questions that a human might ask is "what is it like living in the spirit world?" The question cannot therefore be answered with an depth of completeness. Life here is like life there. An existence within a complex world of variety, form and dimensions.

I tell you this so you may appreciate that the mystery you believe exists about the world I live in does not exist. The mystery lies only in your acceptance.

I hope my words this time have helped you understand how similar our two worlds really are and how the continuation from one to the other happens.

Thank you for writing my words so accurately.

Goodnight to you all.
