

Good afternoon. My commadation to you for the article you've just finished about Susan and Jon. Nicely worded and balanced. I wasn't much for writing when I was alive on earth. I wished I'd taken time to do it. It's one of those regrets that your story talks about. Darny things now you have the chance on earth.

But there is one other sentiment that your article touches on that I'd like to talk a little about. It's regarding the way we often struggle to be heard by people on earth who are well capable of hearing us, but don't.

As you've mentioned yourself on more than one occasion, there really is no great mystery to communication between our two worlds. It could be a whole lot easier, if it wasn't for the barricades that people choose to put in the way.

More often than one would consider, we try every which way to get a message to someone only to have it ignored, blocked, refused, or simply left unheard.

Do people not realise that we want to communicate with them? It would give us so much joy to be heard or to be given a voice more often than happens.

Take Susam as an example. Her helpers this side tried so hard to be acknowledged by Jon and other members of the extended family. Signs were sent that were so obviously from us. Not only to Jon, but three other people that Susam thought might receive the messages.

Yes she was frustrated. But she was relieved when Jon did start to take notice. It happens all the time. Messages fall on deaf ears. We often joke that if we did have a phone that could work between our two worlds, many people would still not believe us!

This is why the role of mediums on earth, and here, is so important. Actually, more than important - vital.

I'll confess that many of the mediums, including yourself at times, could be a lot more open in relaying our messages without needing to modify them all the time.

We know, and you know, it's not yet an exact science, but it could be. If only we were heard more, and if only the mediums became more eager to improve their abilities.

Anyway, that really sums up everything I wanted to Share with you today.

Let me finish by thanking all the mediums you side and this, for all the wonderful work they do. Our worlds are closer for it and will only get closer with time.

Please do take on board my words this day, whenever you read them.

Our love for you all is boundless.

Goodbye.
