

You caused a few of us to laugh a few moments ago when you declared to your partner that "sometimes, life gets in the way."

I mean, what else is there, but life itself! Has anyone ever repented back and said that no-life is better? Anyway, I had to chuckle as you said it!

We knew you were coming to pen for us, so were aware of your movements.

I want to ask you a question, more rhetorical this time.

What do you expect to get from sitting with the pen? What are your expectations and why?

This may seem a bit obvious, but people working with us would serve themselves well to take time and review their answers to those questions. You know there is this life after yours. You have some notions as to how it transpires and why. You trust that we can communicate with you, and some of you know you can communicate back.

So, why continue to persist if you are so certain. What do you wish to gain from communicating with us? Is it wisdom? Is it a deeper understanding? Is it for curious reasons wanting to know the science and the conditions of your life continuing?

You see, my good friend, there are many more people on your side of life that would approach such a thing as an after life as miraculous, unbelievable, exciting, incredible and whatever superlatives you care to think of.

But is that the same expressions the mediums feel?

Do you appreciate the true depth of your capabilities to unite these two worlds? Do you convey that expression to others about your work. Do you do so with excitement and definition?

Just because someone knows you are a medium, how do assert that claim? Do you honour it with effort and conviction, or is it just a chore? A routine you follow?

We see mediums the world over in positions where they need to unite our two worlds with grace, but do so with limp expressions of desperation, panic and determination to protect their fragile egos.

I could keep you for hours explaining how wonderful it is to know we live in a beautiful world of love and joy. I could make you envious of this life. I could fill you with hope and comfort that all your passed friends and family are here, more alive than they ever were on earth.

Would that inspire you to share this miracle with greater determination? Would you choose to live your earth life to the full, knowing it really only is a stepping stone?

What are your reasons for this work? Have I given you some inspiring thoughts?

Is your philosophy reflective of your beliefs?

Go do this work with renewed energy and passion like you've never experienced before.

Our greatest pleasure comes from letting you know that this eternal life is everything and more your desire. We will communicate with excitement and passion every single time. Do you relay that to others from your work?

Your earth phrase "go do your thing" is apt right now. But do it knowing the truth that only you experience from us. We are love. We are life. We are eternal. And you are those too.

Goodbye and thank you for penning my words so well.
