

"There's a kinda hush, all over the world tonight...."

Yes that was me singing that song in your head. That was one of my favourite songs back in the day. As I always say to you, check out the lyrics and work out the moral related to your work.

Well, here we are again, and you seem to be staying a long time where you are. You must like it there.

I want to ask you what your thinking is around and regarding people you know that have crossed to this side. I'm asking because a great many people seem to be on the fence with their points of view. The great majority of people seem to believe there is an afterlife, but they don't seem to be interested in speaking to their loved ones over here. It's as if they don't trust themselves enough to accept they can talk to them. Yet these people would be happy enough to allow a medium to give them a half-baked connection.

I was rhetorically asking you of course. I know gods are more open to the communications. But so often we hear people saying things like, "I've never heard from my mum since she passed," or others say things like, "why doesn't my sister or brother try to connect with me, if they're living on."

Sometimes those very people are pulling out their hair here to be heard. Yes I know another speaker recently talked to you about this, that is why you're thinking "I'm just repeating things to you."

But it's a point we want understood more by people.

You have readers that want to hear from loved ones this side, yet aren't trying hard enough, or with enough conviction, to make it happen.

I imagine if someone told you you'd won the lottery and then a few minutes later changed their mind.

Frustrating?

That is what it's like for us. We make a connection and relay a message, only for it to be forgotten or dismissed five minutes later.

Trevor? Your mum and dad? Did you want to hear from them once in a while? Good, of course you do. Then allow them to communicate with you in whatever way they can. Then once you receive a message in your mind's imagination, accept it 100% and don't rationalise that you made it up.

Ok, perhaps you're not so bad, but your readers, well

one or two of them at least,
could do with pricking their conscience up.

Our world is in the same space as your world. We're just on a different vibration. We're around you all the time. So wondering where we are is showing ignorance of the facts.
We're here.

Can you hear your mum's voice in your head? Take a moment to listen.

There you go - did you hear her? Was that a nice message? Excellent. How easy was that?

Take a moment to write down what your mum said.

Don't worry, I'll wait here.

"Hello darling. We are around you and we do keep an eye on what you're up to. Say hello to that lovely Jane. She's a wonderful girl. You look after her won't you. I'll be here with your father if you want to speak again. Bye Darling!"

There you go. Well done! Not quite word for word, but good enough.

Now then, I have to leave you soon. I'd like you to emphasise this point with you current and future readers. Will you do that?
That's the end of my message

for this session.

Now you enjoy the rest of your day and we'll all be here waiting for when you return.
Goodbye love.
