

Hello Trevor.

When I was living on earth, I had several occasions where I was taken seriously ill, momentarily died, experienced this world I'm in now, before being taken back to my life on earth.

When this happened, I was always surprised when I finally opened my eyes and found I was still alive, so to speak. Often I was moved to tears of disappointment to still be alive. Don't misinterpret me, I didn't want to die, ever. But after experiencing this life, all be it for a mere few seconds of each time, I never wanted to leave.

I'll never forget those sensations of serenity, peace and love that I got when I glimpsed this world. After my visitations, I lost my fear of dying forever. It had been heart issues that caused my deaths, and was the cause of my final death too.

By your modern day doctors' standards, those in my time were hit and miss. It was during one of the last attacks of pain. I was finally informed it might be a heart condition. It was, but nobody detected it.

When I did finally pass, this time I knew I wasn't going back to earth and honestly, I was elated and relieved.

A friend of mine here was asked by a medium on earth the other day, "Was it like earth here?"

I loved his answer. Yes but on steroids. I had to ask him what that meant and when he explained its meaning, I thought how close to reality it was.

This is the problem though. How to explain to someone on earth what its like to live in another place governed by a whole new set of boundaries, or rules as you might call them. Even now after being here some great many earth years. I still struggle to interpret enough sensible words to explain our lives here.

You might hear some describing it as, "everything is the same, except it isn't". Me, I just say this life is just life.

I'm working with a lady on earth right now that still fears death as she interprets it.

She can't grasp the concept of this life, even though she's been a medium for many eath years, and may I add, a good medium.

I try to distract her thoughts towards the things she's still got on earth to enjoy and experience.

I feel your energy is low, so I'm going to leave you now -
Please have a great day.
